HHS Office of Inspector General Releases

New Telehealth Report

The Office of Inspector General (OIG) recently released an investigative report on Medicare telehealth services during the first year of the pandemic.

The findings demonstrate the importance of effective, targeted oversight of telehealth services to ensure that the benefits of telehealth are realized while minimizing risk.

- The report identified 1,714 providers out of about 742,000 whose billing for telehealth services posed a high risk to Medicare.
- Those providers raised red flags on at least one of seven measures that may indicate fraud, waste, or abuse.
- Those bills accounted for services to about half a million patients.
